Dear Nigel Turner

I've travelled throughout Europe on your planes and so know what an excellent job you do. Your routes reach the parts that other airlines do not reach.

With flights cheaper than ever and 2.5 billion air passengers last year which is six per cent greater than the year before, and planes such a safe way to travel (except Aeroflot), I cannot understand why anyone would want to bring an end to the airline business. But this is just what the greens want to do. Airline Passenger Duty, Kyoto Protocol, Days of Action of Aviation. What is the justification for this?

Clearly the problem is that the greens don't like to see anyone enjoying themselves on the cheap unless it is in activity that they approve. Well in which case we may as well chuck it all, go and live in tepees, not cut our hair for a year, wash in mud, play the flute, dance round fires and indulge in al fresco sex. Now I have no intention to do any of these debauched indulgences, apart from possibly the last one.

The greens have no power and they take no responsibility. But it does not stop them being the greatest attack on post-war democracy since Al-Qaeda and Channel 4's Big Brother. They are infiltrating governments everywhere and turning the heads of politicians to their cause – Brown, the prime minister before him, the boy in Cabinet who is just out of his school trousers. You'll notice that I deliberately failed to mention Mr Prescott. It's high time that Two Jags should be allowed to forget that he slept with his secretary, played croquet when he should have been working, beat up voters and brought disgrace to his government and our country.

I will support you all the way in any fight against this attack on our liberties. In the meantime, good luck to you and your fine company.

Yours sincerely

Peter Shullot
