Dear Andrew Edmiston

The Subaru Legacy is a winner. It's practical, it's tough, it stands out. It's all the things I am in my position as a self-made IT millionaire. Congratulations. Even my teenage delinquent son Wayne has a picture of it up on his bedroom wall, jostling for space with Jordan and Shakira who he gazes at for longer than is healthy.

I want to congratulate you for not doing anything about climate change. It's a fabrication made up by loony greens and lazy journalists based on lies and distortion. What Car did a survey that said Subaru cars produce 215 g/km of CO2. That gets my vote! What's better is that you didn't respond to the survey unlike other car makers. Good for you – you've got better things to do than speak to a journalist who uses the words of others to write his articles.

It's time that the government stood up and took notice of the silent majority who don't believe in climate change. If we did then we would buy the "eco cars" on offer to us, with their lower taxes and exemption from the congestion charge. Instead of closing down car factories the government should close down Greenpeace.

I see that in California the car industry killed off electric cars by buying up the technology to make them and then didn't use it. Maybe that's an idea for your R&D department.

Please assure me that you will stick to your guns and still produce cars that I will want to drive.

Anyway, good luck to you and your fine company.

Yours sincerely

Peter Shullot
