Dear Sir

So Texaco is really called Chevron? I never knew that when I fill up at one of your stations. You must be proud to run such a great organisation as Texaco / Chevron that is so well known for its community work.

I'm concerned about the hysteria concerning climate change. It's a made-up story so we can be told wind power good, oil companies bad; solar energy excellent, oil companies evil. It's really a campaign for more government interference and to run you out of town.

Wind, solar, nuclear energy; biomass, lpg, hydrogen cell, Flora cooking oil. They all spell the death knell for the black stuff.

You can't allow this to happen. The point is we like the car or else we wouldn't drive them. But the vegetable-eating, black-wearing, Monibot-worshipping, pot-smoking, reality-denying, GM free greens want to take this away from us. You'd think that pulling in to your local petrol station is worse than killing the wife and burying her under the patio.

Any chance they could be rounded up and dropped down an oil well? As that is apparently illegal do you have a strategy to deal with them?

Finally, I don't know who you are. You are very difficult to find. Maybe you've found a way to bar your name from being Googled. If so, let me know how you do it as it would assist for my business interests, which I don't want spread over the internet. Anyway, good for you. Keep a low profile and stay out of the way of the mad greens.

I'd like to hear what Chevron can do to keep the greens in their place. In the meantime, good luck to you and your fine company.

Yours faithfully

Peter Shullot
