Dear Bill Parfitt

God bless GM. From the Victor we had when I was a child, to the Vectra I drive now, I have only ever known Vauxhall. The comfort, the handling, the speed is second to none. It's a legacy I hope to pass on to my own children if they can ever understand that driving is not just something else to do when you're on the mobile phone.

I'm worried, Bill. Worried that the world is turning upside down. It's this commotion about climate change. The story is one big fake. Global warming is as real as the Loch Ness Monster or Simon Cowell's lunch pack. It's a con so the government can impose taxes, raise prices and take the car out of the reach of the ordinary man in the street such as me – albeit one who's made his fortune as a self-made IT millionaire.

I'm being deprived of the right to drive where I want, blasting out my sound system, telling everyone that I'm here as I disappear into a red sunset, while obviously keeping to the speed limit.

You know what I'm talking about. General Motors was part of the Global Climate Coalition set up to put a stop to this delusion. And before that, GM set up National City Lines, which bought up the railways and then closed them down. Can't you do something again to deal with the opposition? Perhaps sabotage the work of Greenpeace and their allies, by legal means of course?

As your slogan says, Take Control.

Anyway, good luck to you and your fine company.

Yours sincerely

Peter Shulot
